1. The airfield, about 1.5 x 2 km, was northwest of Pudozh (36°31'N/61°48'E), Karelo-Finnish SSR. There was no concrete runway. PWs did grading and rolling work at the field.
2. A hangar, about 100 meters long, was on the eastern edge of the field, and several small buildings were on the northern edge.
3. About 5 twin-engine Douglas aircraft and eight to ten small aircraft, mostly biplanes, were permanently stationed at the field.
4. Possible expansion of the field was planned since the woods extending to the north and west were being systematically cut.*

* Comment. This is the the Pudozh airfield, which was known during the war. The field was apparently used as a courier airfield up to December 1947.
